

OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT

NEWPORT, R. I.

JUL 31 1963

Dear Mr. Kirkpatrick:

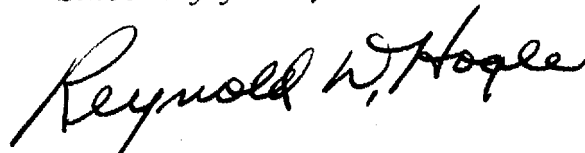

As part of our Strategy Study for the 1963-64 academic year, we will be examining the organization, responsibilities, functions and relationship of the offices, departments and agencies involved in the formulation and implementation of national security policy. I am most pleased to extend to you a cordial invitation to return to the College and participate in this program on Monday, 18 November 1963.

I would like you to address the staff and students at 11:00 a.m. on that date on the subject "The U. S. National Intelligence System." The address is envisaged as a discussion of the role of the intelligence community in the evaluation of the relative capabilities of the U. S. and the U. S. S. R. intelligence systems on a world-wide basis. If you are able to remain for the afternoon, I would like to schedule an informal discussion of the morning subject with selected students.

Your audience would consist of the staff and students of the Naval Warfare Course, numbering approximately one hundred seventy-five officers of all the armed services and civilians from various governmental agencies. All members of the audience would be U. S. nationals cleared to receive security information classified up to and including TOP SECRET.

Your addresses in conjunction with our courses of study over the last few years have always brought forth the most complimentary comments from all of those who have been privileged to hear you. I hope that we shall have the pleasure of having you as our guest again this fall.

Sincerely yours,

REYNOLD D. HOGLE
Rear Admiral, U. S. Navy
